of differences, the Chairman stated that there was a permanent Fire Committee consisting of Messrs Oakes and Corby, seemed desirable.

At present these differences are apparently irreconcilable. The Fire Association desire to continue their present organization. A majority of the Township Committee wish to form a town fire department. Unless one or other of these parties will yield their preferences nothing can be done. Should the Fire Association offer their services to the town, the minor difficulties could easily be settled in conference. For the Township Committee to yield would be to sanction a return to last year's status. The roster of the Phœnix Hose Company and the Watsessing Company were presented, and some rules and regulations for the government of a fire organization were presented but not acted upon. The absence of the Township Counsel prevented the taking of any action and the committee decided to hold an adjourned meeting on Wednesday next. A resolution was

At the meeting of the School Board on Tuesday evening, permission was given Mr. B. McNally to circulate 1,000 copies of his drawing-books in the schools, to be furnished by him free of charge.

The time for holding the graduating exercises was fixed for Friday evening, June 22d, at the First Presbyterian church. The graduates are eight: Miss Jennie Bancroft, Anna Berry, Ida Robinson, Hattie Russell, Harry Cowens, John G. Broughton, Ledyard Haskell, and Leonard Haskell.

The Census has been completed and placed in the hands of the County Superintendent. The number of children in the District between the ages of five and eighteen is 1557, precisely the same number as that returned last year. A comparison of the growth of the two school districts into which Bloomfield Township I is divided, shows that while District No. 7, has grown from 860 in 1868, to 1557 in 1885, the upper district has remained stationary, reporting 109 in 1868, and 106 in 1884. "Mortar without Sand."

To the Citien: The above quotation and following extracts are from an article that appeared in the New York Tribune, April 14th, 1885, giving a detailed account of the fall of eight dwelling-houses in Sixty-Second Street, between Tenth and Eleventh Avenues, burying the workmen in Plans and specifications had been approved by Inspector Easterbrook. Robert Mackey was examiner for the district; George W. Spitzer, Architect; Charles A. Buddenseik was the Contractor.

Inspector D'Oench said the plans and specifications are all right. "The trouble is the walls were not properly built." Philip Hausman a builder, No. 542 W. 49th St., said, "They were built of refuse. Look at the bricks that were being used, the miserable offal of a brick-

But though that is enough to condemn any building if the public safety is considered at all, it is by no means the worst feature of this case. "You see these brick-bats are almost clean. "There is no mortar on them at all. "The stuff used in laying the brick in the wall was simply wet dirt.' "It is called loam; this loam is fine

"Sand and lime make mortar." "A fourth part of the lime required to make good mortar with sand will mix this loam, and while wet is somewhat sticky. "So soon as it gets dry it does not

"All the builders and masons present corroborated these statements." Said one, this loam when wet is mud, when dry it is powder."

If this is possible in a great city where a Bureau of Builders to which all plans tion for the settlement | and specifications must be submitted and approved before perimits are granted; with public inspectors and Supervising Architects, whose duty it is to see the who would consult at any time when it law is complied with; what is to be expected in our suburban towns where no legal restraint to avarice exists, if own ers do not give personal attention.

It is unfortunate architects pay so little attention to mortar.

Lime and sand only should be used. It adheres firmly to brick, lath or stone. Walls composed of it will not crack or

It will shield the cellar, pantry and clothes presses from vernin, and the longer it remains the harder it will get. .

Mr. Editor, if you will send a reporter to examine the sources of supply, and give the public information respecting the material used in making mortar for Bloomfield and Montelair, it would be interesting and perhaps useful reading. If it meet with your approval, in the near future I purpose to call your attention to its value as a sanitary agent.

To The Bloomfield Citizen:

I desire to thank the Bloomfield Firemen through you for the aid extended on the occasion of the tire at my residence, regretting that the scarcity of water, rendered that aid of no avail: still, my thanks are due for their prompt response to the alarm and their efforts made to save property.
